Nonsexist Language in Social Work Journals: Not a Trivial Pursuit

John F. Else, Martha J. Sanford

Published: 01 January 1987   Article history ▼

_Abstract_

A 1984 analysis of 32 leading social work journals over a two-year period revealed that 24 had policies or practices that supported nonsexist language. Only eight, however, provided explicit instructions to authors regarding the use of nonsexist language in submitted manuscripts, and only ten consistently implemented the standard. It is recommended that the profession adopt a formal policy on and specific guidelines for the use of nonsexist language.
